Executive Summary

The Crime Victims Unit collaborates with public safety agencies and community partners as well as with Department of Community Justice (DCJ) staff to develop a more coordinated system response to crime victims' issues. This scale up offer will fund two positions: a Victim Advocate to assist and support crime victims, and a Program Specialist Senior, who will concentrate on orchestrating the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (CSEC) project, a multi-jurisdictional system collaborative process that includes social services leaders, elected officials, state policy makers, criminal justice system representatives, citizens and survivors.

Program Description

As part of the Crime Victims Unit, the Victim Advocate will work with DCJ staff and community partners to develop and pilot a program to increase restitution collections. The Victim Advocate will also assist in the development of trainings to Parole/Probation Officers (PPO) and Juvenile Court Counselors (JCC) that will lead to improvement in the following areas: victim notification, restitution collection, referrals to services, victim protection and communication to victims about probation and parole.

CSEC is a prevalent problem in Multnomah County. Because the I-5 corridor passes directly through Portland, this city is an easy transport artery for CSEC victims and illegal drugs. Local and federal law enforcement agencies in Multnomah County have worked on over 200 sex trafficking cases (fraction of the activity in Oregon) involving both domestic and international victims. The CSEC project is helping expose and derail this once flourishing "business." The Program Specialist Senior will continue the work of the current Collaboration Specialist by overseeing the monthly CSEC Steering Committee meetings (chaired by County Commissioner Diane McKeel) and eight designated workgroups. This position will continue to support the CSEC project's goals which are to: 1) identify exploited youth and youth at risk for exploitation; 2) actively investigate and prosecute cases where adults have exploited children; and 3) intervene appropriately with youth and compassionately serve victims.

Outcome	Number of youth identified as exploited or at risk of exploitation.	150	0	110	120

Performance Measure - Description

New program offer. Outcome measure data reported by the Sexual Assault Resource Center [SARC] and Child Welfare. The desired trend for this measure is upward, as this would indicate an increase in the # of youth we are able to identify.
